WHO'S GUIL

By arrangement with the Pathe Exchange The West Virginian each Saturday for a number of weeks will present a novelized version of a photoplay, the scenario of which was written by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow. These stories will each be complete in themselves, but the whole will consist of a powerful expose of existing social and economic ills. The pictures will be shown at the Ideal Theatre on the Thursday following the day of publication.

EIGHTH STORY Beyond Recall

Margaret Graeme had amazed her friends by dropping out of the social world for a time, and returning to it the gueer statement that she had been taking a course in law.

People wondered what John Leon-ard would think of this freak on the part of the pretty but strong-willed girl to whom he had so long been en-

But Leonard was not given to airing his opinions for the benefit of the Then, too, he had new interests of his own, just then, that so absorbed him as to leave little time or thought for lesser matters.

The Explorers club, of which he a member, was organizing an expedition into the unpopulated hinter-lands of Brazil—an expedition which Leccard had largely financed and which he was to lead.

Preparations for this six-months abe from New York engrossed his whole attention for weeks. At length all was ready, and his passage was booked on a Brazil-bound steamer which was to sail at 2 a. m. on New

In the early afternoon of New Year's Eve, Leonard called at the Graeme house to say good-bye to Margaret.

He found Margaret in the living m of her father's home, waiting for shown toward his visits for many a long day.
"Congratulate me!" she exclaimed

T've just had the most wonderful hit of luck. I was afraid you wouldn't call before I had to go out. And I wanted so to tell you!

What is the wonderful news?" he asked gayly.

"Mr. Halloran has promised to make me his secretary! Think of that!" naturally trying to think of it," said had. Leopard nerplexity. "But it doesn't make souse to me. Why should a wall-to-do girl want to be any man's secretary—and deprive some needy the of a good job And, who is 'Mr. Helloran?'"

"Who is Mr. Halloran?" she echoed ignoring his first question. Mr. Charles Morehouse Halloran, my ignorant friend, is the new district at racy who was elected last November nd who takes office tomorrow morn ing. And—"

"Oh!" grunted Leonard in disgust.

all?" she snapped. "You needn't sk of him as if he were an ashcar friver. He is one of the most bril-liant criminal lawyers in America and minal lawyers in America and everybody says he will be governor or United States senator some day

"He is one of the most unscrupulous and corrupt machine politicians in the city," contradicted Leonard.

You shan't speak so of him!" said the girl, sharply. "Mr. Halloran is a friend of mine, and of father's too. And I won't hear him vilified, even

"He appreciates my ability and my ambitions for a career!" she hurried on, enthusiastically. "He is going to make me his secretary, and to help me show what a woman can do when for once she is given a fair chance." You have no right to-

"You have not," he denied. "No one has. Edwin Martel's father thought be 'had a right to do as he pleased.' So he left his money to charity in never trained to earn a living. And, a result of his father's injustice

"I'm not interested in your friend Edwin Martel. I—"

But I am," interposed Leonard. "I'm so much interested in him that I'm go ing to take him on my Brazil trip one of my assistants. It will give him work and a livelihood and teach to rough it, while he is shaping plans for the future. I made him the offer today and he's accepted it. Margaret, I've seldom asked a favor of you. But-dear, give up this silly ambition. Don't accept Halloran's

You can't realize what it-" "I still seldomer ask a favor of you, she broke in ironically. "Give up this silly expedition to Brazil. Don't accapt the Explorers' club offer."

What?" he demanded, taken aback. Surely, you're not in earnest? Why, it means my whole career." argaret!" he begged, "be sensible. I ask only-"You have no right to ask anything

You are not my master. "I am the man you have promised

She stripped the engagement ring from her left hand and held it out to What do you mean?" he asked, be-of mean that you seem to regard

VER BUTTERFLY." "SAL-LY SALT," "THE BLACK PEARL," ETC.

NOVELIZED FROM THE SE-RIES OF PHOTOPLAYS OF THE SAME NAME RELEASED BY PATHE EXCHANGE,

an engagement ring as a fetter. To make me your slave. I refuse to wear fetters. Take it!"

Long and earnestly he gazed at the willful girl, who returned his glance so flercely. Then he said, very slowly:

"I am going now. You will not hear from me in any way for more than six months. But some day I shall come back to you. And by that time sharp experience will have brought you to your senses. I would have saved you from that experience if I could.

He left the room and the house without so much as a backward

By sheer will-power, she thrust Leonard himself from her memory. The district attorney-elect was to disc with her father and herself, Later Hall loran and she were planning to look on at the New Year's Eve revels in one of the big restaurants.

"Edwin Martel," Leonard had once said, "is a living proof that luck is the very worst thing in the world-for the fellow who hasn't got it."

And he was right. Born and brought up to the idea that he was to inherit a goodly fortune. Martel found himself cast on the world at twenty-five, without a dollar.

The man was strong, willing, ear, to learn. But, for lack of the right equipment, he was barely able to pick up the most precarious sort of a liv ing.

The chance to go with Leonard to Brazil came to him as a godsend. He was not only out of work and at the very end of his resources, but he was also engaged to be married.

Elsie Drayton, whom he had met at a dance, was probably the worst bit of ill-luck of all that had befallen Martel. She was a high-strung, ill-disciplined girl who had come to New York to study art, and in whom the artistic temperament crowded out any natural common sense she may have

She had fallen in love with the goodlooking Martel at sight, and had de-liberately set out to make him propose to her. Knowing Elsio's hysterical devotion for him, Martel dreaded to tell her of the job that would entail a half-year's absence from her: even thought it might lead to an earlie marriage than his former prospects had warranted. But the news must be broken her soon or late. So, finishing his rather meager packing, and having an hour or so to spare before meeting Leonard at Dorley's restaurant, he made up his mind to have the ordeal over with, and to tell his tidings and say good-by at the same time.

Accordingly, somewhat late in the evening, he left his own lodgings and, suitcase in hand, set forth for the lodged. Elsie's tiny apartment was ramshackle building devoted to cheap stellers and presided over by and erderly janitress, Mr. Wiggs by name.

"Forget That You Sent An Innocent Man to His Death?

Mrs. Wiggs, from her own quarters footsteps on the stairs and neered out. Seeing Edwin halt at Elsie's door, she odded and returned to her room.

Elsie, recognizing the knock, came running to the door to admit her

"Oh. I'm so glad-so glad to see you!" she greeted him. "I've been crying my eyes out because I was afraid you were going to let New Year's Eve go by without coming to see me. Why, Ed, you look as if you'd lost your best friend. What's

"I'm at the end of my resources," he began, "You know that, I'm out job that will pay me a marrying sal-

"But I have an offer," he hurried on, "An offer that will mean everything to me—to both of us."

"An offer? You mean an offer of a Brazil."

"To Brazil?" she gasped.
"Yes. We sail at 2 o'clock tomor

"You shan't go!" she sobbed hysteri-"You shan't do it! You asked me to marry you. You made me love. And now you want to desert me!"
"Don't be so absurd!" he commanded, his nerves raw. "You talk as if I were trying to get rid of you instead you are taking the heart all out of me. Don't send me away with the memory of a face all blotched with tears!

"I'm not going to send you away at all!" shrilled Elsie, her high voice pitched almost in a scream. "I'm not going to let you leave me. You promised to marry me. And now you want to desert me. I'm going to hold you to your solemn promise, Ed Martel." Mrs. Wiggs, in her cubbyhole room at the far end of the hall, paused in of the tearful, angry voice reached her. Mrs. Wiggs kicked off her flapping slippers, opened her door softly, and padded, pussy-footed, down the hall toward Elsie's apartment. Mrs. Wiggs could hear the voices of the two lovers in angry dispute; but she could catch none of Martel's words and aggravat few of Elsie's.

Mrs. Wiggs could hear the voices of the two lovers in angry dispute; but she could catch none of Martel's words and aggravatingly few of Elsie's

"There is no use in keeping this up any longer," said Martel. "We'll both say what we'll be sorry for. And I don't want my absence to be marred by ugly memories like that."

He picked up the suitcase. The frantic girl suddenly lost the last atom of her shaky self-control. Flying at him, she seized the suitcase and tried to tear it away from him.

None too gently he pulled the suitcase away from her.

"Dcn't! Don't! You're killing me! Mrs. Wiggs, hovering near the key hole, caught the words, and she thrilled with excitement. Apparently this was no mere quarrel, but a bat

"Don't be foolish, dear," pleaded yond the door, "You are behaving like a cranky baby. It isn't worthy a grown woman. Get up and stop acting Somewhat roughly he drew her to her feet; then turned to go. With a case. As he tugged to get it away from her the catch slipped.

The bag flew open and its contents were scattered broadcast. Collars, shirts, underclothes, brushes, neckties and coats strewed the floor. At Mar tel's feet tumbled a revolver that had been rolled up in his sweater at the bottom of the case.

Elsie caught sight of the fallen weapon. Before Martel could stoop she had seized it and was brandishing it above her head.

"If you don't promise not to desert " she began

"Drop that thing, you little idiot!" he growled, catching her wrist in both hands and, by a quick wrench disarming her.

"Shoot me, then! Go ahead and shoot me. I've nothing to live for "This ain't just a scrap," mused Mrs Wiggs, catching the shrill words. "It's beginning to look like murder. The landlord will give me blazes if I let folks kill each other here."

Martel dropped the pistol into the side pocket of his coat. It was an old one he had donned for shipboard wear. And the pocket into which he thrust the revolver was a pocket into which he had once inadvertantly dropped a lighted cigarette. Almost the entire bottom of it was

The pistol therefore slipped through and fell again to the floor.

"Shoot me!" Elsie was sobbing. "I'd rather die than live. I swear I won't live if you leave me! I swear it!"

The man looked hopelessly at the quivering girl. Then his roving glance fell upon a table clock. The hands pointed to 11:30-the very hour and minute he was due to meet Leonard a Dorley's restaurant, a full ten minutes' walk distant.

He caught up the sultcase and start ed hastly to repack it. But Elsie sprang at him again and twined her fingers in the case's handle; so that nothing short of painful force could loosen her grasp.

Martel gave another despairing look at the clock. Then releasing his hold on the suitcase he bolted from the apartment before Elsie could him or so much as guess his intent. Mrs. Wiggs, in dread lest the an tertaining quarrel should degenerate into a killing, had started toward her own room to put on her slippers and go forth thence to summon aid. Thus she wholly missed Martel's departure. John Leonard, at a corner table in tenth time. Martel was already 11 minutes late for the appointment.

"Eleven forty-one!" he murmured "If this is a sample of Martel's eff another assistant. He-Through the crowd of guests Edwin Wartel thrust his way to Leonard's job? Isn't that splendid? Tell me "I'm sorry to be so late," he apoloabout it."

"John Leonard has offered me a hard run. "I was detained. I went splendid salary and a chance for big to say good-by to the girl I'm engaged to. She didn't want me to go. And..."

"You're a lucky man!" commented "Yes. We sail at 2 o'clock tomorrow morning. With luck we ought to be back here in six months or so. And—" Leonard bitterly. "The girl I'm engaged to was perfectly willing to have doesn't care if she never sees me

"Hard luck!" sympathized Martel. "But, at that, it's better than having one's sweetheart threaten to kill herself because one is going away."

"Did your sweetheart do that?" sked Leonard in wonder. "Lord, but asked Leonard in wonder. I envy you! Mine practically turned "And so you are! You are "Instead of going into exile and ring at me. You don't know when a peril and hardship for your sake! treasure you have. Go back to her to be strengthened and her Try to reconcile her to your go-

"I Won't Let You Go!" She Panted

me by a later boat. A few days' de serve to make her see things differ-

Ten minutes later Martel was climb ing the stairs he had descended a half an hour earlier—the stairs leading to Elsie's apartment.

Meantime the girl had gradually recovered from her swoon. Sitting up, dazedly, she looked about her in vacant-eved amaze. Then she saw the the floor. And, all at once she remembered.

Elsie's dilated eyes strayed from the suitcase to something lying on a rug beside it. Something that glinted queerly in the lamplight. It was Edwin Martel's revolver.

As though hypnotized by its glitter, she continued to stare at it. Presently her hand went forward, almost stealthily; and her fingers closed disordered mind, was the full and final solution of her problem.

Martel had left her. And, in leaving, he had taken away all that made her life worth living. Perhaps when he should hear she was dead, he might be sorry. From the grave she could sting him with a barb of remorse.

This was his own pistol, too-this pistol whose muzzle felt so gratefully cool against her fever-hot flesh.

Elsie let herself play morbidly with the idea, as a child morbidly bites on a sore tooth. She knew little of fire arms. But she had heard that if a trigger were pressed hard enough

She did not know just how hard one needed to tug, before the pistol w go off. And, experimentally, she tightened her forefinger around the trigger. There was a flash—a roar that rever berated through the whole loose-doored apartment—a pungent smoke cloud filled the little room. Mrs. Wiggs, half dressed, heard the report. Flinging a long cloak around her, she dashed down the hall. Outside Elsie's door she paused. No sound came from inside. She was about to turn the knob, when it occurred to her that Martel, who had doubtless fired the shot, might very possibly put should she break in upon the scene of carnage So she fled down the passa and down the stairs and out into the midnight city.

In the studio street, a throng of revelors were making night hideous with their racket. Horns, rattles, con-fettl, "ticklers," cowbells, ticker-tape, and a dozen other temper-wrecking devices were in evidence. A mimi battle had sprung up in the middle of the walk. Groups of bystanders, on their way to restaurants, had halted to laugh at the spectacle. A peg-post policeman looked on with a tolerant grin.

Suddenly, the policeman drew himself up and saluted, as a man and a woman in evening dress paused near him to watch the fun. Patrolman O'Brien had a good memory for faces And this man with the slender, fair-haired girl on his arm, was Charles Morehouse Halloran, the new district

Halloran, still new enough to police deference to be gratified by it, returned the salute.

"You see." whispered Margaret, "Already you're famous. A year ago, that bluecoat would have ordered you to move on. Now, he salutes you as if "Perhaps," gallantly suggested Halloran, "he is saluting the beauty of my new secretary. He Mrs. Wiggs, plowing her way, in flustered manner, through the crow flung herself on Patrolman O'Brien, "Officer!" she squalled. "There been murder done, back here, not tw "There's minutes since! Come quick!

"Murder?" repeated O'Brien. "Where? Who?"

one of our tenants. She's just been shot by Mr. Martel. He's the who's been keepin' company with her. They quarreled, something terrible, this evenin'. An' just now he shot her. Just as the clock was a-strikin' twelve.

O'Brien waited for no more. gan to push a path through the folly crowd that hemmed him in so tightly "Way, there!" he bellowed, trying to make himself heard about the din of cowbell, horn and rattle. "Let us

"Officer!" spoke up Halloran, at his side, "take this young lady and myself with you. It is midnight; and my of ficial duties can begin with the first murder of the new year.'

"Certainly, sir," agreed O'Brien, convoying them slowly through the pack of people. "Come along if you like." "Do you mind?" Halloran asked Margaret Graeme. "You know you must get used to such things, if you are to be my secretary." "Of course, I don't mind," she as

"and I can be of help by taking notes for you. Oh, why can't we move fast We're simply crawling." "You're lucky we can move at all, miss," said the policeman, over his sured him, excited at the prospect.

shoulder, "in a mob like this." Five minutes later, Martel entered Elsie Drayton's studio. On the floor, under the dim-turned light, lay the body of the girl from whom he had parted a bare half hour before. Nearby gleamed the revolver. With a cry, Martel flung himself on is knees beside the dead woman. Her body was still warm. He got to his feet and stared dumbly at her. Scarce knowing what he did, he picked up the revolver-and recognized it as his

Out into the hallway he reeled, with some vague idea of shouting for help. But horror had, for a moment, stricken him dumb. Scarcely had he started down the passage when he saw several head of the stairs. One of them was a policeman. Martel darted back into the room, to show them the way.

Turning, just inside the doorway, he faced the policeman who had entered at his heels. The overzealous officer, anxious to show off his prowess to the new district attorney, leaped at Martel and grappled with him.

Martel, utterly taken back, instinc-tively defended himself, but a blow from the policeman's nightstick knocked him senseless. from He came to himself in station house cell. Next morning he faced a charge The public agreed that Halloran began his official duties as district attorney by extremely prompt and efficient work in the Martel case. Not only had he visited the scene of the murder within ten minutes after the commis sion of the crime, and had been present at the prisoner's arrest, but he personally handled every detail of the prosecution. Moreover, he was aided, most intelligently, by a young society woman, Miss Margaret Graeme, whom he had appointed as his personal secretary night in perfecting the case against Elsie Drayton's slayer.

The case itself seemed clear enough. A brief review of it, sent out by the press, was printed in a Florida newspaper which later was used as "stuffing" for a box of supplies for-warded to an exploring expedition in the farther wilderness of Brazil.

John Leonard, chancing to pick up the wad of newspaper, which one of his assistants had just thrown out of the newly opened box, smoothed it out and glanced over the rumpled pages. News of the outer world-even very ancient news—is welcome to peo

And scanning the smudged inner sheets. Leonard came across a headline which caught and riveted his horrifled attention. The headline was:

MARTEL CONDEMNED TO DIE. Slayer of Eisle Drayton Sentenced to Electric Chair.

Followed a New York "date line" and the following abridged item:
"Edwin A. Martel was yesterday sentenced by Judge Hinkle to die in the electric chair during the week of March 30, for the murder of his sweetheart, Elsie Drayton, an artist. "Martel was engaged to be married to Miss Drayton. On the evening of December 31, he called on her, allegedly to say good-by before starting for Brazil on the Leonard expedition. Mrs. Wiggs, janitress of the studio building in which Miss Drayton lived, heard the sounds of violent quarreling as she passed along the hall outside of the victim's apartment. "She heard Miss Drayton call out in terror: 'Don't! You're killing me! and, afterward heard her cry de ly, 'Shoot me! Go shead and shoot me!' Half an hour later, Mrs. Wiggs, in her own room, heard a piercing scream, followed almost at once by a pistol shot.

"Rushing out into the street to sun on help, she returned presently with Patrolman O'Brien, just as Martel, pistol in hand, was making his escape. At sight of the policeman, Martel ran back into the room. O'Brien followed him and, after a fierce struggle, succeeded in overcoming the murderer.

"Martel's defense, oddly enough, was an alibi. It is established that the shooting occurred precisely on the stroke of midnight. Martel admitted visiting Miss Drayton on that evening, but declared he left her apartment at 11:40 and did not return to it until 12:10. He said he spent the intervening time at Dorley's restaurant with "Back at the studio buildin'. You John Leonard and that he was know the place. Miss Elsie Drayton, taking his leave of Leonard as the clack struck twelve.

"Mr. Leonard sailed for Brazil at two in the morning, before Martel recovered consciousness after his tussle with the policeman. All efforts the prisoner's attorneys, to locate Mr. Leonard have failed, as he is in the 'hinterland,' beyond the reach of tele graph.
"It it needless to say, no credence was placed in Martel's remarkable alibi; since all evidence points to the fact that he did not leave Miss Dray ton's apartment from the moment he first entered it, until he attempted to escape afer the murder was committed. The revolver with which the vic-tim was killed, bore Martel's name carved on the butt.

"Great credit is due to District Attorney C. M. Halloran for his brilliant handling of the case, and to his pretty secretary, Miss Margaret Graeme, for her really noteworthy ail in building up the impregnable structure of evi-dence against the accused."

John Leonard read the bady crum pled article with eyes abulge. looked again at the date, then groaned aloud. An hour later he was on his way to the nearest town that had a telegraph office, and thence, post-baste to the crust.

Margaret Graeme sat in the libarry of her father's house. A book lay on her lap. But she was not reading The last few months had put premature lines into her face, and there was a new look of melancholy-almost of terror-in her eyes. She stared into space as if trying to fathom an unknown depth And thus John Leonard, on his way uptown from the ship, found her. She rose to greet him as he entered the room. But he paid no heed to her timidly outstretched hand or to her de precating smile of welcome. His first curt words were: "I am too late. My cablegram wa delayed somehow in Brezil. The operator went on a spree, I suppose. I find it never reached the district at by wireless, yesterday, of Edwin Mar tel's execution "Don't!" she shuddered, "Oh, lot me torney until this morning. I board.

forget it!" "Forget it?" he said raspingly, "For get that you helped send an innocent man to his death? You will be lucky if ever you can forget it. Or perhaps, he sneered, "independent womanhood and a public 'career' take no account of such trifles as a judicial murder."

"Don't," she said again, imploringly, "Oh, John, do you suppose you can make me feel worse than I de? When he was sentenced he turned toward me and looked me full in the eyes. And his look went through me like white-hot iron. All at once I knew, whatever the evidence against him that Edwin Martel was innocent. went to the district attorney. I begged him—on my knees I begged aim—to get Martel a reprieve "ntil you could be heard from. Mr. Halloran just laughed at my plea and said: prieve and such legal delays are for rich men. Not for poor guys who haven't cash or influence. If it wasu't for an occasional poor man caught in its meshes, the law would never have a fair chance and I'd never make a rec that very minute, and came back home. But I can never undo what I have "Never," coldly assented Leonard. "The law has been satisfied. And justice has been cheated. If Edwin Mar tel had had money enough, he could have gotten a delay until I come home As he didn't—the law took its course. The law that you gave me up for. The law whose study you preferred to the honored position of wife and mother."

He Stared Dumbly at the Dead

"Oh, John!" she wept. "I have sinned! I have sinned horribly. But I've paid. I've paid in tears, in anguish, in heartbreak! Is there no for giveness? Can you never take me back and give me another chance? I'll spend my whole life, trying to

Like granite his face was set, as he gazed coldly down into her imploring eyes. Then—between him and the woman who so vainly entreated his woman who so vamiy entreated ms forgiveness and love—a shadow seemed to filt. The shadow of Edwin Martel. And the shadowy lips seemed, to Leonard's excited fancy, to mur-

"Forgive as you hope to be forgiven If I can forgive her, cannot you?"
Involuntarily, Leonard's sternly folded arms opened. And the girl he loved crept weeping into their tender shelter.

(END OF EIGHTH STORY.)

INTERNATIONAL Sunday School ::: Lesson :::

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.) (Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 20

RIOT AT EPHESUE

LESSON TEXT—Acts 19:23-41.
GOLDEN TEXT—The love of money is the root of all kinds of evil.—I Tim. 6:10. Teachers ought to have good maps and keep before the minds of their classes both the ancient and moder names of the places Paul visited. Pau resided at Ephesus nearly three years

A. D. 53 to 56. The events of this lesson occurred about three years after our last lesson in Acts. I. The Missionary Work of Paul (vv. 1-10). How long Paul remained at Antioch after his second journey we do not know, but having passed through the "upper coast" he came to this city of Ephesus, which was an important city and a great mission field. In Revelations 2 and 8 is a list of the churches which he evangelized from this center. It was a great and effectual door for him (I Cor. 6:9) read also Acts 20:17: 2:35). In this city Paul found a religious guild of 12 members (see vv. 2-7), whose religious experience needed the enrichment of the Holy Spirit; a like need is ever before the Christian church. The Miracles Wrought by Paul (vv. 11-20). Ephesus was a center of magic and witchcraft, and special power was given Paul to work miracles which confounded the magicians in this, their stronghold. The Gor transforming the characters of men-Deeds of love and service are the best proofs of Christianity, and these are the things which awaken heathen na-tions to seek after the Christian religion. But such deeds are often imi tated as in this case. (See v. 13.) However, only the real spirit of Christ can work the true workings of the Gospel, and thus the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified in Ephesus. Imitation is often the sincerest form of

III. The Mob's Attack Upon Paul's

Work (vv. 21-41). The first result of Paul's work was the burning of the books of magic (vv. 18-20). Many who had been dupes of the magicians censed their secret practices and declared their wrongdoings in this pub-lic manner. Literally, book after book was thrown into the fire, much the same as in Florence Savonarola had his "bonfire of vanities," Paul's wonderful success had to have its testing before he left. The Gospel "way," the way of salvation, of true living, is sure to create a stir sooner or later, Preach the Gospel faithfully and fully, and it will stir up any community. It is not necessarily a bad sign when things begin to be disturbed. It may simply indicate that the fire is get ting hot. The good results of revivals do not hurt business, but they do hurt the devil. So that "big business" was intensely stirred up in the city of Ephesus. Demetrius, their leader, uttered a striking and truthful commendation of Paul (v. 26), although it was entirely unintentional. (See I Thess. 1:9-10). Demetrius does not seem to seek to controvert the preaching of Paul, or that it did not square with the word of God, but rather that it would interfere with financial con-siderations. The modern world is full of descendants of the Ephesian silversmiths,—politicians and business in-terests which defend the saloon, and fairly respectable citizens who receive rents from such business, or from im noral or unsanitary properties, and who cry out against any reform which interferes with trade and money making. There are many today who are very enthusiastic religionists if they can coin money out of it or get into

At this theater meeting (Paul was not present, vv. 29, 31) Demetrius appealed (1) to wealth, (2) to religion, (3) to the honor and fame of the city and (4) he also made an esthetic appeal, (vv. 25, 26, 27). The Jews put forward one of their number, Alexan in sympathy with Paul and his companions in their preaching against the worship of Diana or that as Jewish Christians they did not maliciously hope to destroy the worship of Diana and the business interests of that city, Their effort, however, only stirred the mob to a larger shout, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," which lasted for two hours. Those who yell the loudest think they are sure to prove their point, though in such a way the point does not stay proved. Paul combines fearless courage and humble co sense, and, while he fain wo peal to the mob (v. 30), he refrained. The mob must soon awaken to the manliness and spirit of Paul's soul It was the town clerk who interfered (v. 35-41) and by skillful management quelled the excited mob. He was the temple keeper and showed that the worship of Diana was so settled in Ephesus that no company of Jews could overthrow it, and that they did not have any real cause for violence.

He also emphasizes the fact that the image of Diana, their chief had been miraculously sent to the by Jupiter. He called attention to the fact that Paul had not committed the wrong of which he was charged.

Sad Contrast

Bachelor (sadly)-I dreamed last night that I was married. The alarm

Benedict (more sadly)-I dreamed last night that I was single. The twins woke me.-Braclo News